Alba (Scotland): Past and present

State of Gàidhlig in 1891:

The language had apparently declined in use since the 1870s as the age structure of the Gàidhlig speaking community suggests. There were no monolingual Gàidhlig speakers left. But it is quite clear that the area had been a genuine part of the Gàidhlig speaking world because also many locally born people were returned as speaking the traditional language as well as English.

Gàidhlig was less strong in the lower parts of the area than around Droighneachan (Drynachan) near the famous Na Srianaih.

Area description:

This factsheet is concerned with the hilly hinterland of the village of Caladar (Cawdor) in the former county of Narann (Nairn).

Most residents were living from the land, either as farmers, foresters, agricultural labourers, or servants. The open moorland and hill country around the gorge of Na Srianaih (The Streens), however, was the world of shooting lairds, Gamekeepers, and shepherds.

Background of Gàidhlig (Scottish Gaelic) Local Profiles:

The 1891 census was the first such enumeration exercise with an unequivocal language question. After more than 100 years the original census forms are publicly available for detailed analysis. During research concerned with the “Gàidhlig (Scottish Gaelic) Local Studies” a vast number of such local statistics have been gathered about the Gàidhlig speaking population of Scotland in that year. As many of these results could not be included in the reports these concise factsheets are a welcome way to publish some of the “local gems”.
